FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

What is botulinum toxin?

Botulinum toxin (commonly known as BOTOX) is an injectable medicine which temporarily paralyses muscles by blocking the nerves which supply them. The muscles targeted are those responsible for causing wrinkles on the face.

Does it hurt?

A brief scratching sensation is felt at the injection site, but the needle size is similar to a human hair. In rare cases there can be some bruising or swelling, but this quickly resolves. An ice pack will be used before the treatment to minimise any discomfort.

How long does it take to work?

The treatment can take between 2-21 days to take full effect and you will be offered a review appointment after 14 days to check your progress.

How long does it last?

The treatment should last between 3-6 months and is dependent on age, skin type and other factors, which your aesthetic nurse practitioner can discuss with you.

Are there side-effects?

Headaches and local bruising are rare. Some patients may not respond to the treatment and in very rare cases a drooping of the eyelid can occur. This is reversible through the use of eye drops.

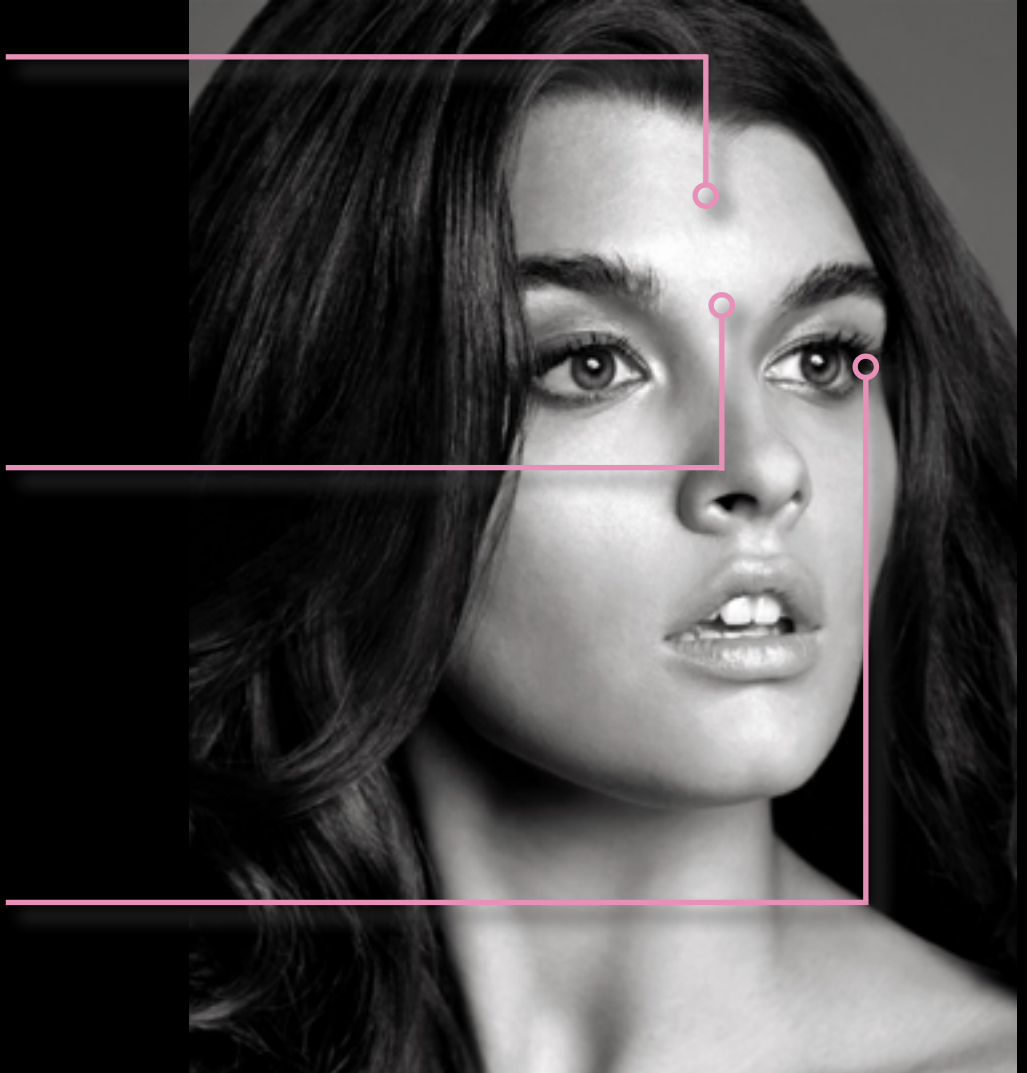

Is it safe?

This treatment has been used for many years. The toxin itself is extremely dilute and the injections are very specific, therefore it is very rare to get any serious complications or side effects.
